

After a large Thanksgiving dinner, the traditional American family notices that they all are drowsy. The “food coma” is a result of oxygenated blood being restricted from the brain and being shunted to the stomach in order for digestion. All of the arteries that supply the stomach are derived directly or indirectly from the:

- Splenic artery
- Hepatic artery
- Gastroduodenal artery
- Celiac trunk

